N. J. Editorial Excursion.

Those of the New Jersey excursionists who thought it going out of their way to visit Chambersburg on the route to Orkney Springs, must have felt, after their hand-to-hand treatment in that fine Pennsylvania town, that no time was lost; that they were more than amply repaid for making the detour. The citizens were out again in large force at the depot on Tuesday morning to see us off. They even sent their fine brass band along with us upon the train. Amid cheers and music and the waving of handkerchiefs we were soon on the way southward.

At Williamsport the first glimpse of the beautiful Upper Potomac was had, and here the train passed over the river into Virginia. Martinsburg was reached at nine o'clock. This place is on the Baltimore and Ohio road, and the company has extensive car-shops located here. A change of cars was made at this point, the excursionists being transferred from the Cumberland Valley to the Baltimore and Ohio road. Engine No. 54, gaily dressed in flags and streamers that fluttered in the breeze, stood at the head of a train of elegant new cars. This betokened that President Garfield had made ample preparations for the comfort and even luxury of the party.

A short hour's ride from Martinsburg brought us to Harper's Ferry. This is a place replete with historic interest, from the old revolutionary days down to the present. It is also a place which calls forth emotions of adoration and awe from those who worship the grand and sublime in nature. It is here the waters of the Shenandoah, flowing from the south, unite with those of the Potomac, from the north-west. On the Maryland side a mountain rises a thousand feet, almost perpendicularly, and then slopes back to the east in a table land of large extent. On the Virginia side are the Bolivar Heights, upon the steep grade of which perch the quaint stone buildings of the town, most of them in ruins.

About halfway up the heights is seen the famous Jefferson's Rock. Opposite, across the deep chasm of the Shenandoah, are the Loudon Mountains, nearly as high and as steep as the Maryland Heights. From the top of the latter is afforded a magnificent view, embracing territory in no less than four States.

A little less than thirteen years ago these hills, now naked and desolate, were thickly peopled for several months with the armies of the north. For it was here that the troops under McClellan encamped and recruited after the battle of Antietam. It was on those heights, away up yonder, that New Jersey's favorite THIRTEENTH REGIMENT passed a wretched month of rest (P) without tents, encamped in brush houses, like a battalion of Jonas. Scarcely a month from home, they here realized, by sharp experience of the hot Maryland march, on the hotter battle-field, and on these terrible heights, what Sherman told the Mayor of Atlanta: "War is cruel, and you can't refuse it." But those fresh Jersey boys of '62 could look around them, and for miles beyond, and see the hills and valleys dotted with the white shelter tents of older and more fortunate campaigners. And by night the same presence of a mighty host was indicated by myriads of camp-fires, the hum of countless voices, and the inspiring strains of martial music.

Such is the memory of Maryland and Bolivar Heights in October, 1862. The armies of each side in the late civil conflict have by turns occupied these historic grounds, but to-day there is not a tent-pole left in the ground to indicate the camping place of either.

Before the war Harper's Ferry was a thriving place, the Government having here located, on a site said to have been recommended by Gen. Washington, an extensive depot and manufactory of military supplies, giving employment to a large number of men. All was laid waste, and since the war nothing has been rebuilt except the gigantic iron bridges which carry the rails of the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Shenandoah Valley Railroads. Closely "Old John Brown's," as the stone engine house in which the old man, with his sons and companions, were besieged and captured, a dagger-pointed car is now located, where you may have your tin-type taken "up-on the very spot," with the rough wall of the dismal slaughter-pen for a back-ground. Almost the only thriving business here is the trade driven by the boys in John Brown relics, pamphlets, etc., and, in acting as "guides" for those travelers having the archaeological bent of mind. For our part, however, the B. & O. R. Co. furnished half a dozen persons, thoroughly posted and reliable, several of them having seen service in the Southern Army. This did not prevent one of the boy guides from showing a party the way to Jefferson's Rock. And when he was interrogated, quizzically, by a Paterson editor, he volunteered ed the information that it was "John," Jefferson's rock, and so called "because he was the first man to cut his name on it." When the party got back to the station they found that this ragged young cicerone had been entertainingly preceded them, and in another role, was now turning their honest pennies by peddling the Baltimore papers.

Two hours were spent in dining and strolling about this interesting locality, when the party again took their seats in the cars and started on the journey up the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. We had with us now Col. Robt. Stewart, Superintendent of the Telegraphic Department of the B. & O. R., also Mr. Spencer of the Valley Road, who came aboard to conduct the train safely to its destination, and to look after the enjoyment and comfort of the excursionists.

We soon learned that Col. Stewart, a thorough gentleman himself, brought with him a carte blanche from his Baltimore headquarters. Ice cream, lemonade and other choice refreshments were served ad libitum, while at the stoppages on the battle-fields of Charlestown, Winchester, Cedar Creek and Fisher's Hill, guides were detailed to give all needed information. The old, battle-scarred lines were mostly obliterated, but now and then the piece of an exploded shell would be picked up, while frequently a ruined chimney would mark a chapter in the history of the war. In most places the fences had been restored, and the fertile fields were planted with generous breadths of corn and wheat. Thus we were reminded that "grim-visaged war" had smooched his wrinkled front, and that the plough and the reaper had taken the place of the sword, the fire-brand, and the carbine.

All along the inhabitants welcomed us most cordially. At Winchester, standing upon a height, a fine mansion in which many a General of both armies had quartered, was thrown open and nearly all the party explored it to the observatory, whence a delightful view of the valley was obtained.

Toward evening we reached Mount Jackson, where, upon alighting from the cars, sixty carriers of every describable pattern were in waiting to convey the Jerseymen to Orkney Springs, 13 miles to the westward, at the foot of North mountain. A grand rush took place to secure the choice of the vehicles, which ranged from the four-in-hand stage coach down to the open farm wagon, drawn by a pair of mules. Everything had been pressed into service for miles around. The ladies of the party were generally accommodated in covered carriages. And then our nondescript caravan started on its pilgrimage to Orkney. The road was a fine one, but very tortuous, winding about and over the hills, now through cultivated fields, and now through pleasant groves of pine and oak, with undergrowth of blooming laurel. A romantic stream conjoined with us for the first few miles, dancing noisily over ledges of limestone rock. Then we left the limestone region, and struck upon the softer slate and shale. To the dismay of those in open vehicles a brisk mountain shower came up, toward the end of the journey, and many were obliged to undergo an unpleasant soaking. About dusk the Orkney Springs Hotel disclosed itself through the foliage, a mammoth structure of yet unpainted pine, with quite a village of cottages on all sides of the main building. There were accommodations for 700 guests, if necessary, and the large party was soon domiciled, with the order—"supper at your leisure." Thus the first half of our journey was accomplished without mishap.

On Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, the Jersey people assembled in the immense parlor of Messrs. Moore & Perry's fine hotel, where a presentation was to be made of a handsome watch and chain to Major Jas. S. Yard, of Freehold, by the Editorial Association. While this was going on, the Virginians met in the ball room above, whither the New Jersey delegation soon afterward repaired, to receive a formal welcome. Col. A. W. Jones, of Orkney, made the address of welcome, responded to by Col. M. R. Hamilton, for the Association. Col. Robert T. Hunter, of Winchester, also made an eloquent address. After this there was a cordial hand-shaking all around, and the best of good feeling prevailed.

The ladies of New Jersey, of whom over a hundred were present, taking active part in lively conversation and promenade with the Virginia gentlemen. The rest of the day passed quietly. Some took carriages or saddle-horses and rode out to visit the alum and sulphur springs, some distance away, others contented themselves with the health-giving Chalybeate waters of the springs in the immediate vicinity of the hotel. Many pleasant acquaintances were formed among the party in the parlors and upon the piazzas.

In the evening an improvised musical and literary entertainment came off in the large parlor, under the management of Major Newlin, and other gentlemen. Miss Joslyn of New Brunswick sang and was warmly applauded. She also read from "Hiawatha" with tender expression and touching pathos. Miss Baker, of Philadelphia, was sans timide in what was more than a simple recitation of "The Smack in School." Mr. and Mrs. Wurtz, of Paterson, and others, contributed to what was certainly a very clever entertainment. "Tim Finigan's Wake" was the delicious conclusion, in which the audience were called upon to mourn the (supposed) demise of a Jersey City editor, who, having withstood the hospital-ity of Chambersburg, could not successfully wrestle with the cucumbers and gourd percha pies of one of the dining-houses on the route. Alas, poor Tim!

The grand Southern Tournament came off on Thursday, and proved to be a novel treat to the Jerseymen. The chief features of this exciting sport are as follows: The enlisted knights are generally young athletes of from 20 to 25. They must of necessity be excellent riders and their horses most skillfully trained. The knights, designated by fanciful titles, appear in costume, equipped with pointed lances ten feet long, which are carried in the right hand. An inch and a half ring, bound with bright ribbon, is suspended from a wire at the height of about 7 feet above the roadway. The knight, riding by at full speed, for a distance of 100 yards, must catch and carry the ring fairly upon his lance, in order to make a successful hit. If he does not make the required run in seven seconds, or simply hits the ring, it counts him nothing. On the tournament, given as above in honor of New Jersey, the "Knight of Edge Hill" missed taking the ring but once out of five trials. The winning knight is the leader at the Coronation Ball (which is the grand finale of the tourney). There he chooses a lady and crowns her with a chaplet of laurel as the Queen of Love and Beauty. Maids of Honor are also chosen by the other knights, and these, exclusively, dance the first, or Royal set, at the opening of the Ball.

Shortly before the hour set for the Tournament, the ladies and gentlemen of the party, with the Virginians, were assembled in eager expectancy. The piazzas and windows of the cottages on each side of the selected tilting ground were crowded with spectators. At length the band struck up, and soon the Grand Marshal, Captain Riddleberger, splendidly mounted, and with a broad sash of crimson silk, appeared, followed by the young knights. These numbered eleven, variously uniformed and riding spirited horses. They halted in front of the judge's stand, where an address was made to them, after which Major Newlin read the rules of the tourney, and announced the prizes, among which were purses of $30 and $15, made up by the Jerseymen. "Ride well, Sir Knights, for bright eyes will watch you," was the concluding admonition. The following is a list of the entered knights:

Knight of Edge Hill, Mr. Morgan Moore, Va.
" " " " John Burke, Va.
" " " " E. J. Grandstaff, Va.
" " " " John E. Rice, Va.
" " " " J. G. Holtzman, Va.
" " " " J. M. Hisey, Va.
" " " " The Spencers Press, T. J. Williams, Va.
" " " " Mr. B. F. Murray, Va.
" " " " The Long Star, Mr. A. F. Grandstaff, Va.
" " " " The Valley, Mr. E. Zirko, Va.
" " " " Jersey, Mr. J. Frank Fort, Newark, N. J.

They cantered off to the starting place, below the hotel, the Grand Marshal taking a station fifty yards above, in order to call the names of each knight when ready to ride at the ring, the signal being given by a bugler. The Knight of Edge Hill, the first rider, quickly urged his horse to the required speed, easily took off the ring and raised it on his lance, receiving for his skill the hearty plaudits of the fair ones up and down the line. Thus the sport proceeded, each knight in turn contending for the prize and for woman's smile in this exciting contest. "The Knight of Jersey succeeded in capturing the ring once out of the five trials, when he was rewarded with a round of cheers from his Virginia friends. At length the tournament was concluded. The successful knights being respectively, Elgie Hill, Monmouth, Essex, Lone Star and Stanley Hill. The choice of Queen fell upon Miss Vance of Morris-town, and the Maids of Honor were Misses Yard, Foster, and Bechtel of New Jersey, Misses Moore and Harrison of Virginia. The Ball took place in the evening. It opened, of course, with the Coronation scene, in which Col. A. W. Jones made the customary address to the assembled knights and ladies, impressing upon the former the characteristics of true Knighthood, and bestowing many a fitting compliment upon the latter. Then he called upon the Knight of Edge Hill to crown his Queen.

This imposing ceremony being over the Colonel paid his respects to the royal couple, on bended knee congratulating her who was that morning Miss Vance of New Jersey, but now the Queen of Orkney. The Royal Quadrille was then danced, and afterward all those who delighted in tripping the light fantastic were privileged to engage, the dancing being kept up until half past twelve.

At an early hour on Friday morning preparations were made for the trip homeward. This meant cordial leave-takings from the proprietor and other Virginians at the hotel, where such a pleasant two days' sojourn occurred. Bright as her waters, fresh as her mountain air, and green as her laurel, ever be New Jersey's reminiscence of Orkney Springs!

The homeward journey was but a repetition of the uniform kindness and attention on the part of railway officials, and particularly on the part of the proprietor of the Carrollton House, Baltimore, where the entire party were splendidly entertained Friday night. The Carrollton is a model hotel.

In conclusion, the writer, not being a member of the Editorial Association, may bestow unqualified praise upon the President, Secretary, Treasurer and Executive Committee who planned and managed so admirably this delightful excursion. Well do they merit the thankfulness and praise of the guests under their charge, for courteous kindness and efficient energy throughout the trip.

The pulpit of Westminster church was occupied Sunday evening last, by Samuel J. Leavitt of the Society of Friends. The discourse, which was interesting and instructive, was delivered with great earnestness.

Respectable inhabitants in the vicinity of the Centre were scandalized on Sunday evening last by a disgraceful drunken row. Mr. T. T. Cadmus, who deserves the commendation of all order-loving citizens, made prompt complaint at last the parties, some of whom were arrested and fined. Names are suppressed, partly through intercession on the part of friends of the offenders, and partly because the chief-turps of plans should rest upon those saloon-keepers who, in violation of law, sell liquor on Sunday, and thus are really at the bottom of these Sunday disturbances.

Saloon Keepers and the Sabbath.
Editor of The Record: There is no doubt but a large proportion of the inhabitants of the town would be glad to have the Sabbath strictly observed. They would rejoice to know that the drinking saloons were closed the entire day, so there should be no ingress to their bars either by front or rear. But in the present state of things, no such wish can be gratified; for although the saloon fronts are all closed, every one has a back entry perfectly understood by the tipplers, and it is asserted by those who profess to know, that the Sabbath is their best day.

If they will keep within the law no one has any right to interfere, for their license is in accordance with the law of the State, but they are licensed for six days only and any other person has just as much right to sell on the seventh as those who have a license.

If the saloon keepers sell on the Sabbath or to minors, they violate the laws. The people have a just right to complain, and it is clearly their duty to interfere, and if possible put a stop to it. No one seems willing to make a move to accomplish that object, consequently there is no check given to the full enjoyment of their illegal practice.

From the earliest times the sanctity of the Sabbath has been respected, and generally enforced by legal enactments. At all times the Sabbath has been protected by law, and those who do not believe in it, indicate their respect for it, by closing their places of business, as conducting to good order. Humanly demands the general observance of the Sabbath. Working men who spend the Sabbath in the saloons, drinking, need a day or two to recover their wasted strength; but those who spend the day in the house of God and at their homes, return to their work on Monday with renewed energy and spirit. It is the testimony of many business men, that but for the repose which the Sabbath brings, it would be impossible for them to prosecute their several callings. But the keepers of drinking saloons destroy the sanctity of the christian Sabbath, and make it a working day for themselves. They desire full liberty to carry on their traffic through the sacred day, and who is to be benefited? Not the working class surely, for they spend their hard earnings and get no equivalent for it, not even food, and in many cases the wife and children at home are suffering for the want of the necessities of life.

General drinking in a community means general poverty. If every saloon were closed in the town, the wealth and comfort of our people would be indefinitely augmented, for it is claimed that not less than one hundred and fifty dollars are paid for drink every day in the town. Some claim over two hundred, and a large number who are paying out this money, are complaining that they can't get money to pay their taxes, while they are paying indirectly five times the amount of their taxes, for what does them no good. Can any check be effected for the good of our citizens? Can the saloon keepers be made to close their back doors so that they will not sell free on the Sabbath day? Is it not time for the citizens of the town to rove in accomplishment of that object?

AN OBSERVER.
Closing Exercises in Our Schools.
There was a crush of visitors—parents and friends of the scholars—at the exhibition or closing exercises of the Central School on Wednesday afternoon. Some very creditable declamations and recitations, varied by singing, were given, the whole concluding with a dialogue called Columbia. In this 50 scholars took part. The costumes or insignia, representing allegorically Jonathan, Columbia and their children, the states, were appropriately devised, and the whole carried out in a most acceptable manner. The Board of Trustees were present and Mr. M. W. Dodd, after announcing the promotions, made a short address, complimenting the pupils upon their examinations, and bestowing credit upon the teachers and the former board of trustees for their fidelity, and zeal.

Closing exercises of an interesting character were also held in the Primary schools, during the week. At the Central Primary, on Tuesday morning, the children and their excellent band of teachers won for themselves much credit. A piece called Cinderella, in which a large number of children in the various classes took part, was performed in a very clever way.

We have been informed that there has been a marked improvement in the Brookside school during the year as shown by the examination and exhibition, while Berkeley fully maintains its already well deserved reputation.

THE PROMOTIONS.
The Grammar School receives an accession of 44 scholars from the Central Primary, 11 from Berkeley and 10 from Brookside.

5th class, Grammar School, sends 33 to the 4th class. The 4th 25 to the 3d. The 3d 32 to the 2d. The 2d 19 to the 1st. Of the first class 11 were enabled to pass the rigid examination entitling them to admission in the High School, each of them receiving a certificate of their promotion.

Taken altogether, the township has reason to be proud of the progress made in education during the year just closed.

BLOOMFIELD.
The Young Ladies' Concert at the Presbyterian church Wednesday night, under the management of the pastor's accomplished wife, was, we believe, one of the best musical entertainments ever given in Bloomfield. We regret having only space and opportunity left for a brief and impersonal notice. The concert comprised a very effective rendering of the "Flower Queen" Cantata. A stage was provided the entire width of the church, which, by the introduction of evergreen trees, ferns and flowers, was converted into a grove and bower. When graced by a score or more of tastefully dressed young ladies, a most pleasing effect was produced. The various solos, duets and choruses were well executed, and the occasion will long be remembered with pleasure.

On Wednesday, July 7th Young Men's Christian Union will give their friends a very interesting entertainment. The exercises will consist of a speech by the Rev. Mr. Wheeler of Newark and others. There will be solos, quartets and choruses sung at intervals. To commence at 8 o'clock. Admission Free.

At a meeting of the Library Association held on Monday evening last, a new Board of Directors was elected, as follows: Messrs. Geo. W. Cook, Jason Crane, Thos. McGowan, E. W. Page, David Oakes, G. G. Garabrant, John Sherman, A. T. Morris, G. T. Moore, Dr. J. A. Davis, and Rev. C. E. Knox, Dr. J. A. Davis.

The Town Committee at the late meeting, decided to advertise for proposals to build a plank sidewalk petitioned for on Bloomfield avenue, south of the Centre. No other business of importance was transacted.

Independence Day is to be observed at Weaver's Grove on July 5th, by a fine picnic, during the day and evening. The music will be under the well-known leadership of Prof. Lawrence.

The number of inhabitants of Bloomfield over one year of age, is about 5,300, according to the Astesors's returns. This is an increase of nearly 1,000 over the census of 1870, which was 4,379.

Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Bryant and Miss Mooney, of South Oxford st. Brooklyn, are spending the summer at Mr. M. Bradley's.

Miss Knight of Brooklyn, is at Mr. Henry Adams', Beach st.

Mrs. C. B. Cross, of Monroe Place, has left for Ogdensburg, N. Y. where she will spend most of the summer.

Mrs. Battell of Monroe Place, will spend the remainder of the season at Charlottesville, N. Y.
